The house hourglasses' niches

The Architect, 13 October 2026, for Godric. Req 236 (Design's Q25, his 25.1); the castle model, version 11; question 13; 1:150 at A3.

Four niches along one wall of the Entrance Hall, one glass a house in the Sorting Hat's order (Design's hall(): 1.68 m of wall each, the opening 1.2 by 2.45 m, round-headed, its foot on the flags). Where the books put them: the west wall, the Great Hall's.

now, 4.59 pm: the Entrance Hall shell, turned from the front doors toward the west wall:
the Great Hall's doors, the wall south of them on the left

Canon (the gate)

"set in niches along the wall" (OotP 28, Design's citation); "looking up at the hourglasses on the wall" (OotP 38).
Running down the marble staircase: "glass shattered on the left, and the Slytherin hourglass that had recorded House points spilled its emeralds everywhere" (DH 32).
"Gryffindors passing the giant hourglasses" (PS 15); the giant Gryffindor glass hit by a curse in the hall (HBP 28).

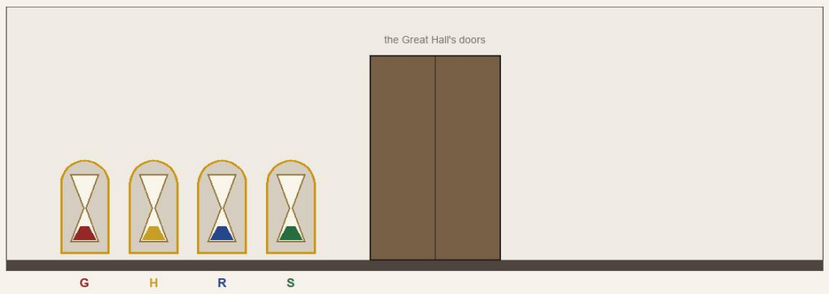

The checks

13.1: 1.33 m to the nearest corner, 1.33 m to the doors' jamb, the pitch 1.68.
13.2: 0.83 m to the nearest corner, 0.83 m to the doors' jamb, the pitch 1.68.
13.3: 4.02 m to the nearest corner, 1.00 m to the doors' jamb, the pitch 1.68.

Plan of the Entrance Hall at the floor

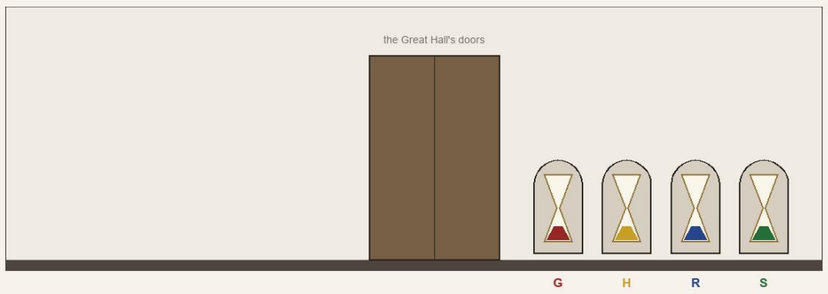

13.1 south of the Great Hall's doors

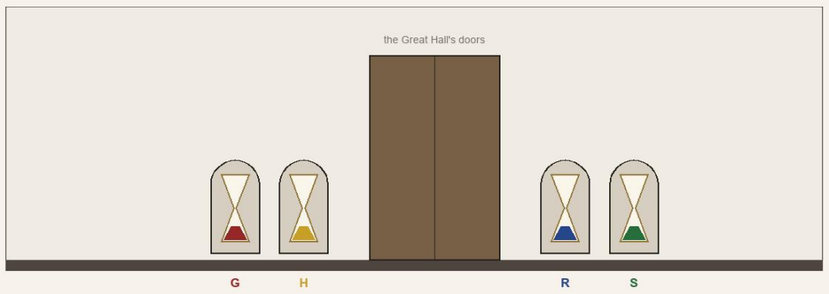

On the left as they run down the marble staircase (DH 32), passed on the way in to breakfast (PS 15); a whole row, as Design draws it.

13.2 north of the Great Hall's doors

Still on the left coming down, farther off; on the right as you come in at the front doors.

13.3 two each side of the doors

Framing the doors; the row split in two, which Design's hall() would redraw.

1:150 printed at A3; the elevations are the west wall from inside, south on the left