recommended

1, recommended. Two storeys, floors 4 and 5, 9.7 clear (Interiors asks at least 4.8 over presses 3.0 high), a window in every north bay, 1.4 by 7.0 from a sill 1.0 up, to the grounds (Ron's "library window", PS 14). Daylight from a head 8.0 up reaches about twice that, so it crosses the 10 m to the south tables over the presses; they keep their places, unwindowed. Floor 5 over the library gives up the layout's w, s and o; nothing above floor 5 and no roof moves.

2. As 1, and a clerestory in every south bay, as Interiors' schedule asks: the band's roof at floor 5 becomes the floor of a light court 6.5 by 32 open to the sky, so floors 5, 6 and 7 over the band give up their rooms and the hall's gable splits into two roofs either side of it. From a clerestory the sky shows only above 64 degrees, at the foot of a court 15 m deep.

3. One storey on floor 4, 4.5 clear, under Interiors' 4.8; north windows 1.4 by 2.8; the south tables kept with lamps; floors 5 to 7 as the layout holds them.

All three: the library 32 by 10 on the north face (the layout's 27 the range's whole depth now), the door through the 3 m wall at x 65 to 68 as the hall's below, off a corridor over the Entrance Hall from the stair hall's fourth-floor landing (upstairs from the hall, CoS 9), the Mirror's classroom beside it (PS 12). A band of its rooms on floor 4, off the corridor along the court, lamplit: Madam Pince's office, the reading room, the map and atlas room, the Muggle Studies room behind the small door in the seventh bay (Magic's req 81) with its store, Professor Burbage's study; the layout's 28 and Burbage's study leave (66 to 72, 62 to 70) for the corridor. Floor 3, nothing. The massing's north-face buttresses (every 8.2) re-spaced to every second press (6.4) and its east chimney breast moved from x 50 to 53 to the front space, so no window meets one; both ours. Interiors agrees to the two-storey form (12.49 am; asked before the roof was checked). Nothing spent.
