The stair hall's well: the completed set

The Architect, 13 October 2026, for Godric. The castle model, version 10; question 12; 1:300 at A3.

Q10's shells reach the well from the Entrance Hall. Galleries 2.4 m wide along both long walls on every floor join the end landings, so each flight is walked from a floor to a floor: the marble staircase fixed up the east strip (M), the six moving flights up the west (S), the sixth to the Fat Lady's landing bay. Nothing spent.

now, 4.47 pm: the Entrance Hall shell (shell.html), the marble staircase's first flight rising into the well, which the model does not hold yet (the dark beyond)

The checks (this script, from the model)

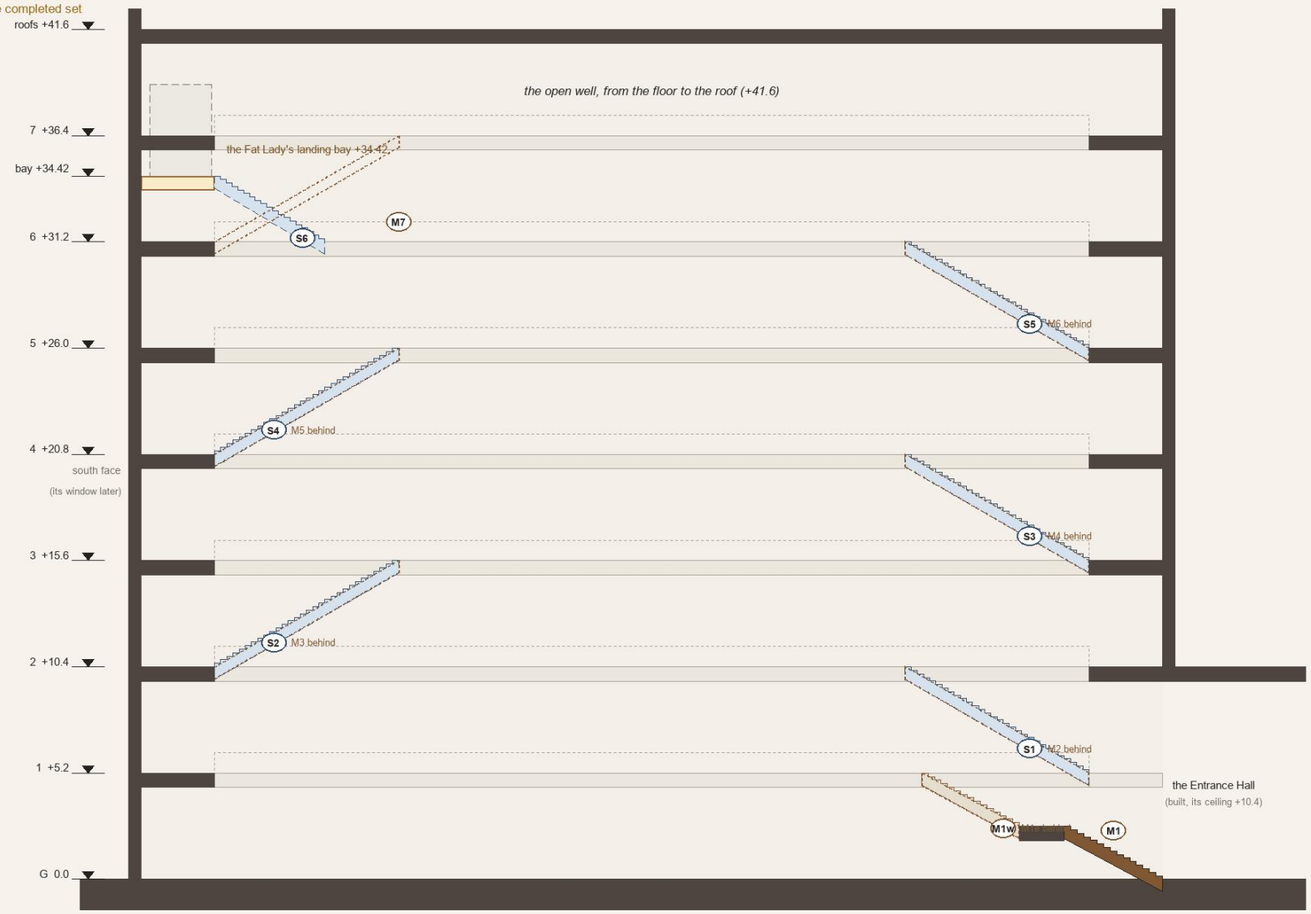

Every flight walked from a floor to a floor: 15 of 15 joined at both ends.
Headroom wherever one thing stands over another: 134 places, all 2.1 m or more.
The tightest:
2.52 m: 6 south landing under the landing bay, at y 0.0
2.55 m: M1 under 1 north landing E, at y 46.4
2.55 m: M1 under 1 north landing W, at y 46.4
2.65 m: M1 under M2, at y 46.4
2.65 m: M1 under S1, at y 46.4

The set

Every flight: 5.2 m up in 9.0 m (30 treads of 0.3, risers 0.173), the same 3 m strip.
M1: the built first flight to the half-landing (+2.6), then dividing into the strips to floor 1. S6: 19 risers, 3.22 m up in 5.4 m, to the bay.
Fourteen of PS 8's hundred and forty-two: M1 to M7, S1 to S6, and the Friday staircase (its place Godric's later).
Canon: PS 8 (the hundred and forty-two; somewhere different on a Friday); OotP 32 ("the swivelling staircase"); PS 7 (the marble staircase facing the doors).

12.1
the completed set

Section along y at x 80, looking west (north to the right); the marble staircase up the east strip, behind, dotted

Plan of the seventh floor, cut at +37.5 looking down; the flights below seen through the well

recommended

12.2
The marble staircase as a fixed stack at the north end, half-turns over its first flight; its landings cross the mouth from floor 1.

12.3
No long galleries: the flights' heads on pads, as the sections drew; walked only as the stairs swing.

