What I found

Her study stands inside the south range's top floor, its centre 5.2 m behind the south face, under the lead flat at 41.6. The willow's spot lies 232 m away at 63 degrees, behind the castle: the line runs 76 m through the range, the stair hall and the north range. No real window in her study sees it, nor any window on the south front below about 94 m.

1, recommended: an enchanted window (OotP 7, "Those are enchanted windows")

Small (0.6 by 0.75, her desk's top), deep in the turret's wall on the willow's bearing, 63 degrees, two oak shutters and an iron latch. Its back stands against the room of lost things, so it is blind in stone; it shows the grounds of 1890 as from her floor, the willow's spot in the middle of its frame and no tree there. It already shows a day long gone, so it is magic either way.

2: a real window, raised above the lead flat — recommended

The turret climbs through the flat and her window sits over the parapet, facing south over the frozen lake to the hills. True to the stone, but the willow's spot cannot be in it, so B16's missing tree goes.
